“Management Education: Being Relevant through Applying, Analysing, Evaluating and Creating”

“Education is the most powerful weapon, which you can use to change the world.”- Nelson Mandela

Outlining the flaws in the current education system. Infosys co-founder NR Narayana Murthy said that due to the rote learning culture, nearly 80-85 percent youngsters are not suitably trained for any job, according to a Money Control report.

The way business is passing through impetuous and unrelenting changes; the new business management, new normal norms are created every day, hence management education should follow the same. It's necessary that the business management program must emphasize on developing skills of students, the relevant content and pedagogy, models design to equip students with right knowledge and competences making them capable to create business value. The national conference addresses the need of shift from contemporary to futuristic approach of management, thereby helping the learners to shape their careers and to be relevant during their professional journey.

The conference aims to provide a platform for discussing the needs and requirements of Management Education for 21st Century. Business environment is constantly changing with speed, technological disruptions, social expectations and internationalisation which demands productive and innovative talent. This conference aims to emphasize on core principle of management education that course delivery should integrate with business needs. The key questions revolve around teaching pedagogy and learning outcomes. The important missing element in business management education is lack of skill development at the institute level.

Few areas can be under taken to streamline management education in India which include teacher development, designing relevant courses, student's active participation in learning and developing creative ideas and mentoring students to ignite their passion. It is important for students to show their keen interest in acquiring knowledge rather than mere paper qualification. They must understand that knowledge acquired will help them in creating a meaningful contribution to the world of work, society and family at large.

The management professional need a combination of attitude and skills to grow as global leaders. All stakeholders including educational institutions, industry, faculty members and students must invest their efforts to enhance the momentum for management education where creativity and innovation would be the key leading drivers.

The future of management education will be determined by its capacity to adapt to a changing economic environment through high quality research, an innovative teaching curriculum and deep engagement with businesses, other stakeholders to give more internships, live projects and making curriculum more application based. However, the demands of both employers and students are changing, requiring an increased emphasis on skills that build attributes such as collaboration, communication, leadership, problem-solving and critical thinking.
